Asbestos Awareness Week Update on James Hardie compensation arrangement

In recognition of the launch of National Asbestos Awareness week, James Hardie today provided the following update on the status of its negotiations with the NSW Government to achieve a long-term compensation arrangement.

James Hardie CEO, Louis Gries said, "Constructive discussions with the NSW Government continue, and both parties are working towards signing a Principal Deed as soon as possible given the complexity of the deal.

"James Hardie is committed to a long-term compensation arrangement for Australian claimants and has invested significant resources in developing a fully negotiated and binding agreement which can be put to its shareholders for approval."

Contrary to accusations that have been levelled at the company, so far as James Hardie is aware, all claimants with proven claims have received compensation. Payments continue to be made by the Medical Research and Compensation Foundation (MRCF), which has funds to meet proven claims well into 2006.

To the best of James Hardie's knowledge, no proven claim has gone unpaid.

Contrary to recent speculation, James Hardie has no plans to leave Australia.

Mr Gries said, "While both the NSW Government and James Hardie concede the negotiations have taken longer than initially anticipated, progress continues to be made. We have delivered draft 12 of the Principal Deed to the NSW Government for their review and would like to conclude negotiations as soon as possible."

The success of the long-term funding arrangement is dependant upon the continued financial viability and growth of James Hardie.

Mr Gries also confirmed James Hardie was continuing to work with the Australian Taxation Office and Federal Treasury to ensure all options regarding the company's application for tax deductibility of payments to the proposed Special Purpose Fund (SPF) were considered.

James Hardie has been advised the NSW Government continues to provide key stakeholders, such as unions and asbestos support groups, with updates on the status of the ongoing negotiations. All parties are aware that current claimants continue to receive their compensation payments.
